

AN APPOINTMENT

That was Made by Ex-President Cleveland's Wife—A Charming Romance of Two Countries.

New York Times: Few of the ladies of the white house in our generation have been known to counsel in national matters with the chief executive. From one who has had opportunity to see and hear, I learn that Mrs. Hayes was the only one for several preceding administrations, and none since her time has been known to even suggest an appointment. My informant gives as an excuse for what he graciously terms non-interference that the President has such a multitude of counsel from party leaders and constituents that nothing is left for the white house mistress. Perhaps the common sense of the women who have occupied the high place has dictated and governed. Let us hope so.

However correct my laudable curia may be in general, I know of one exception. It does not come under the harsh head of "interference." On the contrary, it was done with such finesse that the President, so I am told, did not even hesitate and although he had violated one of his pronouncements to reappoint none who had held place under his first administration, the politicians did not object in this case. And the appointment met the approval of Democrats and Republicans.

Mrs. Cleveland will be surprised to-day, no doubt, to learn that she was the first lady of the white house in many years to ask the President to make an appointment, and one which caused him to break a rule, but the fact remains that she did it.

There is a pretty and tender story in connection with the appointment that I am sure the former gracious white house lady, whose life interests her sex, will be glad to hear the outcome of "her appointment."

Somewhere in the records of state one will find that Henry F. Merritt, of Chicago, was appointed consul by President Cleveland to Aix-la-Chapelle in 1888. A few pages further there is an entry showing that before the expiration of Mr. Cleveland's first term Henry F. Merritt was transferred from Aix-la-Chapelle to Chemnitz.

When Mr. Blaine came in as secretary of state in a Republican administration, a young man called and handed in his resignation. This was Henry F. Merritt.

"Why do you do this?" asked Mr. Blaine.

"I was appointed by President Cleveland, a Democrat, and I am a Democrat," was the answer.

(I am giving you the exact words as nearly as I can remember them) and were told to me by a person who was in the state department when the incident occurred.

"The post at Chemnitz is an important one, commercially," said Mr. Blaine, "and I am familiar with the trade relations between that place and our country. I know something of your work there. You may be a Democrat, but as long as you are an American, I will go back to your post until I accept your resignation."

Mr. Merritt returned and was serving acceptably until Illinois politicians—not unlike politicians of other states—made a demand on President Harrison, and consul Merritt resigned, but I am told that Mr. Blaine regretted asking for the resignation.

One day after Mr. Cleveland's second inaugural Mr. Merritt went to the white house. His card reached Mrs. Cleveland, and the ex-consul was bidden to call. I am told that President Cleveland complimented the consul's work, and expressed a regret that he could not again honor him, citing his pronouncement to make no reappointments.

Then the ex-consul paid his respects to Mrs. Cleveland and her mother. A little story was told of an anticipation abroad. It interested two women. Mrs. Cleveland asked a question, and it was answered by a young man made his debut, and went to Chicago to visit his old home. President Cleveland inaugurated the World's Columbian exposition May 1, 1893. Henry F. Merritt was one of the throng that witnessed the opening of the exposition.

Thirty days after that event, in a batch of nominations sent to the senate, was named "Henry F. Merritt, to be consul at Chemnitz, Germany." Ten days later the young man called at the white house, paid his respects to the President, thanked Mrs. Cleveland, and sailed from New York for his post a week after.

Barmen is a manufacturing city in the Prussian province, and the work of the consul there is important, and certain lines of business in this country are interested in the consular work at that post. I am informed that the consul there is a German, and that the German has been successful in his work.

Henry F. Merritt was high in Masonry. He was introduced as a visiting brother by the Worshipful Master of a Barmen lodge, and delivered several lectures before it. The Master was infatuated with the consul's knowledge of the craft, and charmed with his personality. The fondness of each other led to the society of each other in the consul's home. The consul was the guest of the German in the latter's home. The German sickened, and the consul was his faithful attendant to the end. Just before the death of the German he said to the consul:

"You are the only man I ever knew to whom I would willingly intrust my wife and affairs and those of my children. If all are satisfied, be the husband and father of this household."

When a year had passed Henry F. Merritt was both. The German was a man of means. He left his property to his wife and children. After the consul had made over to him, against his protest, all her rights. Her children—a young man and a daughter—died the same. They regarded the consul as their protector, and their trust in him was one of the most beautiful exemplifications of faith.

When Mr. McKinley became President, Henry F. Merritt resigned, but it was nearly a year before he was relieved.

He returned to Chicago accompanied by his accomplished German frau and her two children. The daughter was a strikingly handsome girl. The former consul bought a home in one of the suburbs of the western metropolis and beautified it for he was a man of refinement and exquisite judgment in all that goes to adorn a home.

He established a lucrative business, and admitted his stepson as a partner. For a season the sunshine of success and that peace which mystifies men and women by reason of its completeness, blessed the returned American, and his family of a foreign country.

Then came quick sickness, too swift to be arrested, and the head of the household died almost suddenly. Every day in death. But somehow the household pined. The German family that had just come to a realization of the meaning of American happiness were left here alone. A son between two graves. I am told that the family finally returned to the old land, the old home in Barmen.

Henry F. Merritt was consul at Aix-la-Chapelle two ladies called at his office. They were Americans in search of information regarding travel and other matters. Consul Merritt was assiduous in his efforts in their behalf. Something in his manner, sincerity, and high-born courtesy left a more favorable impression. As the ladies were leaving the younger one asked the consul to command her in case he should ever desire her influence, and she laughingly added: "I may have some, some time."

The callers were Mrs. Folson, and her daughter, Miss Frances Folson.
